Individual Students:

Unless law professors are involved in interdisciplinary work, they typically do not advise graduate or professional school students in the sense of serving as a major professor, co-major professor or Masters or Ph.D. committee member. However, from Fall 2011 to the present (and prior to that when I was an adjunct faculty member), I have advised numerous College of Law students as an assigned mentor and have advised and supervised numerous other College of Law students concerning satisfying writing requirements in regards to the College of Law's Upper Division Writing Requirement, the Idaho Law Review's writing requirement, and the now defunct Litigation and Alternative Dispute Resolution emphasis area's writing requirement.

Courses Developed:

Although Education Law may have been taught previously at the College of Law by another adjunct faculty member, I developed – first as an adjunct and then as a full-time, tenure-track professor – an Education Law course which focuses primarily on K-12 education. The course introduces students to the legal and policy issues that arise in the K-12 setting and prepares students to effectively practice law in that area.

As part of a joint agreement between Gonzaga University School of Law and the University of Idaho College of Law relating to Gonzaga Law's Summer in Florence (Italy) program, I developed a Comparative Employment and Labor Law course. The course focuses on substantive workplace law issues in three countries – the United States, Italy and Vietnam – representative of the common law, civil law and socialist/communist law traditions. In addition, the course explores the use of alternative dispute resolution mechanisms in each of those countries.
